ESSENTIAL YIDDISH BOOKS

*1000 Great Works

the National Yiddish Book Center*

INTRODUCTION

Zachary M. Baker

Stanford University Libraries

Two decades have passed since the National Yiddish Book Center assembled its first core collection of Yiddish books for research libraries. The 1970s and 1980s experienced an expansion of Yiddish studies in colleges and universities, and library resources for Yiddish were patchy at best. The Yiddish Book Center's original core collections, comprising 500 and 1,000 titles each, responded to this need.

Though the Yiddish Book Center had collected hundreds of thousands of books by the mid-1980s, the first core collection program was hampered by two major factors:

1. Holdings of many key titles were limited, and they became unavailable once the supply was depleted.
2. The pages of many volumes were often brittle and bindings were sometimes damaged as well. The books' fragility was a serious hindrance to their use.

With the arrival of digital reproduction technology both of these obstacles have been overcome. Thanks to the Steven Spielberg Digital Library it is now possible for the Yiddish Book Center to offer a new and reconfigured core collection, in full confidence that supplies will not run out and that the volumes themselves – which are printed on acid-free paper – will have a shelf life of hundreds of years. The approximately 1,000 carefully selected titles in the new core library were drawn from the National Yiddish Book Center's continually expanding corpus of digitized texts.

In addition, a number of major works were specially digitized for inclusion in this core collection. They are available for purchase both individually and as a single collection. As with the original core collection, bibliographical data for each title is available online, both in the National Yiddish Book Center's own catalog and via the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN).

The National Yiddish Book Center's database offers an embarrassment of riches, and it would have been easy to create an extensive bibliography consisting solely of such genres as belles lettres, literary criticism, history, or biography and memoirs. To be sure, works of fiction, poetry, and drama written by a wide range of Yiddish authors, including the most familiar and widely read writers, are well represented in this core collection. Furthermore, because a symbiotic relationship existed between Yiddish authors and their critics, many exemplary works of literary criticism accompany works of the creative imagination. In addition, literary editions possessing a critical scholarly apparatus – most of them published by university presses in Israel – are included wherever possible.

Until the middle of the twentieth century, as the critics Sh. Niger, Dan Miron, and Benjamin Harshav have argued, Yiddish and Hebrew literatures were intimately intertwined, even as their exponents were caught up in an often-bitter sibling rivalry. The affinities of these two literatures clearly warranted the inclusion of Yiddish translations of writings by such outstanding Hebrew authors as Hayyim Nahman Bialik, Joseph Hayyim Brenner and the Nobel Laureate Shmuel Yosef Agnon. Works that these authors originally wrote in Yiddish are also included.

But limiting this bibliography to the universe of belles lettres and criticism would have resulted in a skewed perspective of Yiddish cultural expression and the modern Jewish experience alike. Accordingly, this core collection properly includes texts relating to the Jewish religious tradition, important works of historical and linguistic scholarship, memoirs by socialist, communist, and Zionist activists (among them survivors of the Soviet Gulag), and firsthand accounts of the Holocaust. (Among other things, this collection includes the most extensive edition of Emanuel Ringelblum's Warsaw Ghetto writings in their original Yiddish.) Key reference works – above all, dictionaries, encyclopedias, and bio-bibliographical lexicons of Yiddish authors and theater personalities – are made available here as well.

The books listed in the National Yiddish Book Center's database reflect the collecting habits of North American Yiddish readers in the twentieth century, and also the catastrophic destruction of Yiddish culture in Eastern Europe and its suppression in the Soviet Union over the same span of time. Certain periods and regions of Yiddish publishing activity are as a consequence both over- and under-represented in the Yiddish Book Center's holdings. The bulk of pre-1939 titles in this collection were printed in the United States. As often as not, those prewar Eastern European books that are listed here belong to multi-volume sets issued by such major publishers as Kletskin, in Vilna. Soviet and other Eastern European editions are less readily available. The National Yiddish Book Center began its collecting activities in 1980, and for that reason a somewhat disproportionate number of the books in its database – and in this collection – belong to the post-1945 era.

Yiddish literary activity during the postwar decades is a somewhat underappreciated phenomenon, and this collection implicitly supports the contention that the quarter century following the end of World War II was a “Silver Age” of the Yiddish book. The inclusion of volumes belonging to such distinguished publishing initiatives as Dos poylishhe yidntum and Musterverk fun der yidisher literatur, both from Argentina, testifies to that assertion, as do so many of the books appearing in Israel under the labels Hamenora, I. L. Peretz, and Israel-Book.

The Yiddish Book Center has not yet cataloged its serials and has no plans at this point to digitize them. Exceptions have been made for literary annuals, including three pivotal titles: Di yudishe folks-bibliothek, edited by Sholem Aleichem and published in Kiev in 1888; Shriften, edited by the poet David Ignatoff and published in New York from 1912 until 1926; and Zamlbikher, which came out in New York from 1936 to 1952, under the editorship of the poet H. Leivick and the novelist Joseph Opatoshu. Certain periodicals, including YIVO Bleter, Tsukunft, Di goldene keyt, and Sovetish heymland, are available for purchase in limited numbers.

Digitization of oversized volumes and books printed on very brittle paper was deferred until work on the rest of the digital library was completed. At the time that this list was put together (2004) the corpus of digitized texts was still very much a work in progress, and some titles that might otherwise have been selected for the core collection were not yet available.

Thus, a careful perusal of this list will reveal a number of obvious lacunae. Some of these could not be avoided, due either to these works’ absence from the National Yiddish Book Center’s holdings or to the fact that copies in hand are too brittle to be digitized at this juncture. A case in point is the prolific author Nahum Meir Shaikewitz, also known as Shomer. Although he published dozens of chapbooks during his lifetime (in thousands of copies), these publications are by their very nature highly ephemeral, and those books of his that do survive are usually very fragile. For these reasons relatively few of them are included in the digital library. And – unlike another popular Yiddish author of the nineteenth century, Isaac Meir Dick – he was not fortunate enough to have some of his representative writings collected in a well-edited anthology. On the other hand, this core collection does include a biography of Shaikewitz, Undzer foter Shomer, written by his daughter Rose Shomer-Bachelis.

Suggestions regarding additions, subtractions, and corrections to this core collection of Yiddish books are welcome. The bibliographer understands perhaps better than anyone else the import of Rabbi Tarfon’s classic maxim (from Pirke avot 2:21), “It is not for you to complete the task, but neither are you free to desist from it.”

NOTE CONCERNING TRANSLITERATION:

Bibliographical entries are transliterated (or “romanized”) according to standards established by the Library of Congress (LC) and followed by most libraries in English-speaking countries. These standards are based in turn on practices observed by Uriel Weinreich, in College Yiddish and the Modern English-Yiddish, Yiddish-English Dictionary – also known as the “YIVO standard.” LC romanization departs most visibly from the YIVO standard in the way that some consonants are transliterated, e.g., ḥ (LC) vs. kh (YIVO), for Hebrew ḥet; or zsh (LC) vs. zh (YIVO), for the consonant combination zayin-shin. Also, in LC transliteration diacritical marks are added to certain letters so as to differentiate between Hebrew letters that employ the same sound, e.g., t (tav) vs. ṭ (tet).

Discerning readers may notice some inconsistencies in the transliterations encountered within bibliographical entries. Following a common cataloging practice, the National Yiddish Book Center makes use of bibliographical information that is available from other libraries. These bibliographical records were created over a period of decades in many different libraries, by catalogers possessing varying levels of expertise in Yiddish, and while romanization standards were often in flux.

Author headings in this bibliography for the most part reflect forms found in basic English-language reference works, or in the books themselves. By and large they are not the product of systematic transliteration. This approach, too, follows longstanding practices adopted by LC and adhered to by most libraries.
